JOBS NOW

Speech therapist, medical, 21 years. Plus roofing sales, 4–5 months, in-home, 3–5.5 hr presentations.

AGE

Turns 49 in January. Not chasing a first career, wants the next one to be the last one.

FAMILY

Daughter, school age. Picks her up daily, protects that time on purpose.

LOCATION

Texas, Central time. Floated working from the Dominican Republic.

TARGET

"Anything over $10,000" a month, replacing one or both jobs.

MONEY

Confirmed to Chris she can invest $5–7k right now if it's the right fit. Not a blocker.

SALES EXP

Real, consultative, in-home. Evaluation, presentation, close. Not phone sales, not remote.

VALUES

Transparency. Told Chris directly "I appreciate that" when he was upfront about price.

THE ONE THING THAT DECIDES THIS CALL

She has another program's conversation booked the SAME DAY at 2:00 PM. Your call is at 11:00. You have three hours of runway before she hears a competitor's pitch. Close before 2:00, or you're now one of two offers she's comparing on her own, with nobody in the room to frame it.

Read the room before you dial. She is not emotional, not hyped, not looking for a rescue. Every answer in the setter call was short, direct, business-like: "Correct." "Yes, sir." "Of course." She is a 21-year clinician and a roofing closer who runs her own evaluations. Match that energy. Do not oversell her. Give her the real numbers, the real mechanism, and a clean decision. She told Chris she hates surprises and she liked that he didn't hide the price. Lead with that same respect and she will lead you to yes.

1 · OPEN · 0 TO 2 MIN

"Lynda, CJ. Chris said you two had a really direct, no-nonsense conversation, and I appreciate that, because I'm going to run this call the same way. How much time do we actually have before your day pulls you back?"

Lock it. She has a 2:00 elsewhere. Confirm your own window out loud so there's no ambiguity later.

2 · FRAME · 2 TO 4 MIN

"Here's the plan for our forty-five minutes. First few minutes I confirm what Chris already covered so you're not repeating yourself. Then I walk you through exactly how this works end to end, real numbers, real mechanism, no hype. Then if it's a fit, we get you started today. If it's not, I'll tell you straight and you go take your 2:00 with a clear head either way. Sound fair?"

Why name the 2:00 yourself: if you don't bring it up, it sits in the back of her mind the entire call and she compares everything you say to an imaginary competitor. Naming it removes its power and tells her you're not afraid of the comparison.

3 · CONFIRM DISCOVERY, DO NOT RE-RUN IT · 4 TO 11 MIN

Five questions. She already gave Chris the real answers. Confirm, don't re-litigate.

"You've been in speech therapy 21 years, and you're also running roofing sales in-home the last four or five months. That's two full jobs. What made you decide four months ago it was time to add a second one?"

Get her own words for the restlessness. You'll use it in the gap.

"Chris mentioned the Medicaid and Medicare changes coming in January. You clearly track this closely. Walk me through what you're expecting to actually change in your day to day."

Let her explain it in clinical detail. She'll do the gap math for you if you let her talk.

"You said anything over ten thousand a month would let you replace one or both jobs. Is that close to where the two combined are landing you now, or is that a stretch above it?"

"You've got your daughter's schedule to protect, and you told Chris you don't want to promise a time and then miss it because something came up with her. How do you want your calendar to work so that never happens here?"

"Last one. You run a real sales process already, evaluation, presentation, close, three to five hours in someone's living room. What part of that do you actually want to keep doing, and what part are you done with?"

Almost always the answer is: keep the selling, lose the driving and the hours.

4 · THE GAP · 11 TO 15 MIN

THE FRAME THAT FITS LYNDA AND NO ONE ELSE

She is not chasing a rescue. She is closing a window. Twenty-one years in a field about to get squeezed for less pay per session, and a second job that already costs her three to five and a half hours at a stretch, on top of picking up her daughter. This is a woman managing a clock, not a crisis.

"Lynda, let me hand this back to you the way I heard it.

You've spent 21 years building real skill as a clinician, and you can see the ground shifting under that field before it even shifts. That's not paranoia, that's you reading the trend correctly and moving early instead of waiting to get squeezed. Most people wait until the pay cut is already in their check.

In the meantime you picked up a second job that pays you to drive to somebody's house and run a three to five hour presentation, which means the very thing you're good at, selling face to face, is also the thing eating your evenings and your gas money.

So here's the actual trade in front of you. Keep both jobs and hope the Medicaid changes land soft, or take the exact skill you already have, the same consultative selling you're doing in someone's living room, and do it from your kitchen table in an hour instead of five, for a company that's already generated the lead so you're not driving to strangers' houses hoping the roof sells.

What's wrong with that read?"

Then stop talking. She is direct. She will correct you if you're off, and she will confirm plainly if you're right. Either way, let her answer before you move.

5 · CREDIBILITY, 60 SECONDS, THEN OUT · 15 TO 16 MIN

"I'll give you the short version of why I do this and then I'll get out of the way. I came into HTSA after losing almost everything in a partnership that went sideways, borrowed the money to join, and inside about a month I'd turned down a $22,000 job offer for a better one because I actually understood what I was worth by then. I'm not telling you that to impress you. I'm telling you so you know I've sat exactly where a person sits when they're deciding whether an investment in themselves is real or not."

"And you're not walking in cold like I did. You already sell for a living. You already run evaluations and presentations. This isn't a leap for you, it's a format change."

6 · PRE-CLOSE COMMIT · 16 TO 18 MIN

"Everything you've told me says you're going to be excellent at this. You've got two decades of building trust with people in hard conversations, you're already closing real deals in someone's living room, and you moved on this before the industry forced your hand instead of after. That combination is rare.

So before I walk you through exactly how it works, let me ask you straight. If, after I show you the details, this looks like the right fit, is there anything you can think of right now that would stop you from getting started with us today?"

Curious, not challenging. Then wait. If she names the 2:00 call here, good, you'd rather hear it now with 25 minutes left than at minute 40. Handle it live, see the objection card below. If she says "nothing I can think of," move straight to the demo.

7 · THE DEMO · 18 TO 33 MIN · THIS IS THE CLOSE

RUN WILL'S DEMO. DO NOT SHORTCUT IT.

Lynda values transparency above almost everything else she signaled on this call. The demo is where you earn that. Name real people, real numbers, real mechanics. Pause for a plain confirmation after every block, the same way she confirms things in one word: "Correct." "Okay." Get several of those before you ever say a price.

"Is it alright if I walk you through the whole thing start to finish, so you have the full picture before we talk numbers?"

A · The training

"First, certification. About 55 lessons, roughly 20 hours total, but most of it's short, some lessons are seven minutes. Watch it at one and a half or two times speed and you're through it in eight to ten hours. Lifetime access, so it's yours to revisit forever.

Given the hours you're already putting into roofing evaluations, this is genuinely less time than one bad week of driving to houses that don't close."

"Make sense so far?"

B · Live coaching — the transparency answer

"Second, live coaching on Zoom, multiple times a week, a full hour, small group, run directly by Chad and Christian, our cofounders. Not assistants. Them. Every session's recorded, so if your daughter's schedule pulls you away, you catch it later.

You bring a call that didn't go your way, you get it broken down live in front of the group, and you learn off everyone else's calls too."

"Clear?"

C · The community

"Private group, collaborative not competitive, because everyone ends up placed at different companies. You'll be in there with people newer than you and people years ahead."

D · The AI roleplay platform

"We built an AI roleplay platform over five months. You get a script and a proven framework, then sell to AI buyers built from real recorded sales calls, different personalities, different objections, getting harder as you go. Unlimited reps, any hour, no scheduling with anybody. Every call gets graded, tells you exactly what worked and where you lost points.

You already know how to read a room in a live presentation. This just lets you drill the phone version of that until it's automatic, on your own clock."

E · Certification check

"Once you've worked through the AI calls, you do a mock sales call with a real person on our team, scored out of 60. Need 50 to pass. If you come up short, we tell you exactly which points you lost and why, you drill that specific gap, and you retake it within a day or two. We don't move you forward until you're actually ready, because we're the ones vouching for you to the hiring manager."

"Any questions on how that part works?"

F · Placement — Nate

"Then you work one on one with Nate. He builds your interview roadmap, positions your resume, and feeds you three to five matched companies at a time out of our network of 300 opportunities. He personally contacts the hiring manager and gets your application pulled, so you're not sitting on a job board hoping someone opens it. Real interviews, usually inside the same week. If the first few don't land it, you rinse and repeat with him until you're hired. Average time from certified to placed is under three weeks."

G · Lifetime

"And once you're placed, we don't disappear. Course, coaching, community, and placement stay open to you for life. If you want to move to a bigger offer down the road, we help again, no extra cost."

8 · CHOICE OF TWO POSITIVES · 33 TO 35 MIN

"So now that you've heard the whole thing, what stands out most to you? Some people say it's the AI platform, because they can drill it on their own schedule without waiting on anybody. Others say it's Nate and the placement side, because that's the part almost nobody else in this space actually does. Which one hits for you?"

Let her answer fully. Write it down, you'll use it at the close.

9 · PRICE · 35 TO 37 MIN

"Alright, the investment. Chris already gave you the range, so here's the exact number.

Most academies in this space run $5,000 to $15,000. We're at the low end of that on purpose. Full academy, top to bottom, is between $6,000 and $7,000.

Two ways to get started. Four payments of $1,750, one each month, $1,750 today gets you in immediately, kickoff call booked, course and community open tonight. Or $6,000 paid in full, which saves you a thousand dollars.

Which one fits your situation better, the four payments or paying in full?"

Then hold the silence. Ten seconds. Twenty. Thirty. She already told Chris, unprompted, that she can invest right now if it's the right fit. Do not talk past that confirmation. Let her answer.

If she hesitates on the number specifically (unlikely, she pre-confirmed it), remind her once: "You mentioned to Chris you were ready to do this today if it was the right fit. Has anything changed since then, or are we just deciding between the two payment options?"

"I want to hear the other company out at 2:00 before I decide."

The single most likely objection on this call. Do not argue that she shouldn't compare. Argue that comparing after deciding costs her nothing, and comparing before deciding costs her the day.

"Totally fair, and honestly I'd want you doing your homework too. Can I ask what you're hoping to hear from them that we haven't covered here? Because if there's a specific thing, let's make sure I've actually answered it before you walk out that door."

If she names something specific, answer it directly, then:

"Here's the thing though. You already told Chris you're ready to invest today if it's the right fit, and you've now heard exactly what we do, what it costs, and what the placement side looks like. That's not true of the 2:00 call yet, you're walking in blind on that one."

So here's what I'd suggest. Let's get you started with us right now while everything's fresh and you've got real numbers in front of you. You lose nothing by also taking the 2:00 out of curiosity, but you don't have to make today's decision depend on a pitch you haven't heard yet. Does that work?"

If she still wants to wait:

"I respect that. One thing I'd ask, when you're on that call at 2:00, ask them the same three things I gave you straight: the exact price with no upsells, who specifically runs the live coaching, and their real placement network number. If they can't answer those as directly as I did, that tells you something. I'll follow up with you by phone tonight, what time's good after your daughter's settled?"
Never let this become "let me know what they say." Book the follow-up before you hang up.

"Am I too old to be starting something brand new?"

She hasn't said this outright, but it's sitting under "I don't want to be sitting on the floor anymore" and turning 49 in January. If it surfaces, don't dodge it, reframe the math.

"I'll tell you what I tell anyone who asks that. You're not starting sales at 49. You've been selling for 21 years, you just called it patient education and then roofing evaluations. What you're starting is the format, not the skill. And this is the one career where the clock actually runs backwards, the longer you're in it, the harder it is to get displaced, unlike a field that just told you it's about to pay you less for more work."

"How does this compare to what I'm making in roofing?"

"Fair question, and I won't inflate it. Industry average for our closers is $7,000 to $15,000 a month once you're ramped, some months lighter in month one or two while you're still learning. Top performers run well past that, into the $20,000 to $30,000 range. You told me over $10,000 gets you where you want to be. That's not a stretch number for this role, that's the floor for most people who actually work it, and you already run a real sales process, which puts you ahead of where most people start."

"I need to check with my husband / think about the schedule with my daughter."

She was explicit about protecting her daughter's pickup time. Do not push past a family check, solve the calendar concern directly instead.

"Of course, and if it's the schedule specifically, let's solve that right now so it's not a question mark when you talk to him. You build your own calendar here, you open the slots you want, five to eight calls a day, hour each, and your team only books you inside the windows you set. If pickup is 5 to 5:30, you simply don't open that block. That's true starting day one, not something you have to earn."

11 · IF SHE SAYS YES

- Stay on the line the entire time. Do not send a link and hang up.
- "I'm texting you a page right now, stay with me, takes about ninety seconds."
- Narrate it plainly, the same directness she's used all call. "Top box, paid in full. Tap it."
- Terms is one line: "That's the terms and the guarantee, check the box, hit continue."
- Stay on through checkout. Talk about her kickoff call, not the money.
- She texts payment confirmed, you turn on access while she's still on the phone.
- Book the kickoff call before you hang up, working around her daughter's pickup window.

12 · DO NOT SAY

- Do not oversell or hype. She responds to plain, direct, confirmable statements, not enthusiasm.
- Do not badmouth the 2:00 competitor by name or implication. Name the timing risk, not their character.
- Do not imply the Medicaid changes are a crisis she caused or should have avoided. She's ahead of it, treat her like it.
- Do not push past a mention of her daughter's schedule. Solve it with the calendar mechanic, don't argue it away.
- Do not re-run discovery. Chris already got it and she's protecting her time.

- Do not skip or rush the demo. Transparency is the value she named out loud. Earn it there.
- Do not rescue the silence after the price. She already pre-confirmed she can pay it.
